

Let's choose the right way to pay for health care reform.

All of us know we need real health care reform, but there's a right way - and a wrong way - to go about paying for it.

A few in Washington say they want to tax "Cadillac" health care plans, but those proposals would really tax the health care benefits of middle-class people.

We need reform, and that means quality, affordable health care - not more expensive care with fewer benefits.

There's a better way. Let's ask people making more than $250,000 a year to pay their fair share. And ask all but the smallest businesses to contribute.

Shared responsibility. That's the right way to fix our health care system.
